THE COST OF A BET.

Took Beer to Get a Wager Down and Wine to Get It Cashied.

The problem of getting a bet down at the race track under the present strict interpretation of the new anti-betting law was solved the other day at Gravesend, N. Y., in a rather ingenious way.

A man who was anxious to wager $10 on a supposed "good thing" approached a one time bookmaker and asked what price he would lay against Rye in the fourth race.

"Oh, four to one," was the response. "But I don't know you and don't care to be arrested for accepting the cash."

"That's all right," replied the anxious bettor. "Come and have a beer. I'll pay with a ten dollar bill, and you can pick up the change. Of course I'm getting a shade the best of it, but you won't mind that."

They had the drink, and five minutes later a certain man rooted long and hard and shouted jubilantly when Rye galloped home in front. He then rushed off to find the "memory broker" and get his money, but the same old problem confronted him again.

"I'll tell you," slyly suggested the one time layer, "come and have a bottle of wine. I'll pay for it with a fifty dollar bill, and you can pick up the change. Of course I'm getting a shade the best of it, but you won't mind that."

The wine was opened and the transaction completed, and then the bettor turned away, remarking, "It costs something to win a bet under the Agnew-Hart law."

NEW SUNSTROKE CURE.

A Chicago Society Reveals It For Public Benefit.

No more sunstrokes and no recurrences of the same for persons who have been stricken with heat.

The Higher Practical Educational society of Chicago believes that it has made a discovery that will be of practical benefit to thousands, perhaps millions.

The proposition is simple—just block the inside of your hat with felt and you never will suffer from sunstroke.

The society is not absolutely sure of this, but from experiments is positive that a felt lining will prevent any recurrence of heat trouble.

J. W. Gossard of the society is very enthusiastic about it.

"There are many men who went through the Cuban war and suffered from heat prostrations who have been repeatedly attacked by the same trouble ever since," he said the other day, "and when we accidentally discovered that men thus afflicted could withstand the rays of the sun if they wore their winter felt hats we decided to experiment. For three seasons now we have had men wearing straw hats with felt linings, and where they formerly were obliged to hunt the shade now they suffer no inconvenience at all."

GAS TO PROPEL WARSHIPS.

Lewis Nixon Says It Will Be Motive Power of the Future.

"Battleships of the future will use gas as motive power," said Lewis Nixon, the shipbuilder and naval expert, the other day. Mr. Nixon, who recently returned to New York from England, was commenting on a report from London that the admiralty had given orders that a 19,500 ton battleship, the St. Vincent, should be so equipped as to make it dependent wholly on gas for motor power.

"England is ahead of the world in this matter," said Mr. Nixon. "The gas motived battleship will be much more economical and efficient than the steam battleship. The lighter, more compact machinery will save both space and weight. A smaller and inferior quality of coal can also be used. The big battleships will carry coal gas producers and generate the gas from the coal."

Mr. Nixon recently prepared a design for a gas motived battleship of 30,000 horsepower. It had triple screws, with twelve cylinders 30 by 30 inches on each shaft.

Rivals of the Diamond.

The diamond, so long the hardest known substance, now has two rivals, the silicide and the boride of titanium, products of Henri Moissan's electric furnace, being claimed to be as hard.

Double Strength.

Jack—But do you think that hammock will hold both of us this summer?

Eva—It ought to, dear. It is called the Taft.—New York Journal.

The Vice Presidency.

They offered it to Simpkins, who was much liked in the west.

Said they: "You've toiled well, Simpkins. You deserve the little rest." But Simpkins grew quite angry and remarked: "Fergit it! See? Cut loose from any notion that you're going to sidetrack me."

They offered it to Simpkins, who possessed a tiny boom. "The work is pleasant, Tim," said they, "and scares away the gloom." Old Simpkins tore his long gray hair and cried: "Ye rogues, stand back! D'ye think I'll let you lead me in a bloomin' cul-de-sac?"

They offered it to Simpkins from the southern cotton belts. "You'll have to take it, jump," they said, "because there's no one else." But Simpkins' sudden scream of pain, it cut them like a knife. "Don't make me do it, boys," sobbed he. "The blow would kill my wife!"

They offered it to Simpkins, with a club. "And if you fall to take it by the new law you will have to go to jail."

Poor Simpkins saw no way out, but he howled like one with cramps. "I s'pose I'll have to take it, but you might give trading stamps!"
